Post-transition metals are a set of metallic elements in the periodic table located between the transition metals to their left, and the metalloids to their right. Depending on where these adjacent groups are judged to begin and end, there are at least five competing proposals for which elements to include: the three most common contain six, ten and thirteen elements, respectively (see image).

The elements of groups 4-11 are generally recognized as transition metals, justified by their typical chemistry, i.e. a large range of complex ions in various oxidation states, colored complexes, and catalytic properties either as the element or as ions (or both).

Un métal de transition, ou élément de transition, est, selon la définition de l'IUPAC, « un élément chimique dont les atomes ont une sous-couche électronique incomplète, ou qui peuvent former des cations dont la sous-couche électronique est incomplète [1] ». Cette définition correspond à des éléments partageant un ensemble de propriétés communes.

Le niobium possède 33 isotopes connus, de nombre de masse variant entre 81 et 113, et 24 isomères nucléaires. Parmi ces isotopes, un seul est stable, ⁹³Nb, et constitue l'intégralité du niobium naturellement présent, faisant du niobium un élément monoisotopique ainsi qu'un élément mononucléidique. Sa masse atomique standard est donc la masse isotopique de ⁹³Nb, soit 92,906 38(2) u.

It is good to see this kind of work being done. Titanium does seem at times like an underutilized metal that we are increasingly learning how to use instead of rare earths or precious metals.
